USG and area councils pool funds for spring concert

By Anna Mae Sholtes
Daily Campus Staff

At a special assembly meeting of the Undergraduate Student Government Friday, $23,676.30 was approved for expenses for the spring weekend concert.

Part of the money came from a combined area council fund of $8,676.30, and the rest was allotted by USG. From the money allotted by USG, $14,800 was taken from the concert lecture series, and $200 was provided by USG's unappropriated surplus.

Originally, a bill was proposed asking for $24,716.30, but because there was not enough funding available, USG denied this proposal.

"We did not rob the clubs to do this," Steve Protter, one of the sponsors of the proposed budget, said.

Clubs have been under the impression that money for lectures was being taken away from them, Protter said. "Money for concert series was never intended for club lecture series," he said.

"USG is adding money to [the] Budget and Finance [Committee], which is where they should have gone to begin with," Protter said.

The assembly appropriated $2,500 to the Budget and Finance Committee by a unanimous vote.

Reah Mopsik, chairwoman of the Budget and Finance Committee, said the $2,500 will "cover the bare minimum expenses" and leave the committee with "$800 in the balance for the rest of the year."

"Those clubs that were delayed funding will be attending the meeting on Monday," Mopsik said.

A heated argument took place between assembly members and area council presidents over the proposed budget for the spring weekend concert.

Area council presidents argued that they needed every penny they requested in the budget. They also said that students supported the budget as well.

Lie detectors receive mixed ratings in poll

NEW YORK (AP)—A majority of Americans believe lie detectors should be used in the courtroom, but they don't believe they should be used by businesses in most circumstances, according to a Media General-Associated Press poll.

The nationwide telephone poll of 1,512 adult Americans found that 72 percent believed the machines should be used in court to test people accused of crimes, and 63 percent said witnesses in court should also be tested.

Such tests are not presently allowed as evidence in court, in part because their validity is open to debate.

The poll also found that eight in 10 respondents thought lie detector tests should be given to government employees who have access to classified information.

Three-quarters also thought it was appropriate for employers to test workers suspected of stealing, but most objected to the use of polygraphs by businesses in general.

Some businesses require prospective new employees to take lie detector tests. Only 37 percent of those in the poll considered it an appropriate use, and only 27 percent thought current employees should be subjected to lie detector tests.

However, two-thirds of the respondents said they would not object to taking a lie detector test if asked to do so by either a current boss or a potential employer.

"I presume that two-thirds of people are honest, so they don't have any problem taking lie detector tests," said Leonard Saxe, principal author of a 1983 study of polygraph validity for the congressional Office of Technology Assessment.

"But the problem with lie detector tests is that it's just not a valid means of figuring out if people are telling the truth or not," said Saxe, a psychology professor at Boston University. "If people recognized the validity problems...I think they'd have a different opinion."

President Reagan issued a directive late last year that permitted the use of polygraphs for all people with access to highly classified information. But the proposal came under fire in Congress from critics who questioned the validity of polygraphs.

Investigation uncovers details in Swedish prime minister's death

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP)—The man who killed Prime Minister Olof Palme apparently had him under surveillance for some time before he shot him with a powerful American-made revolver, police said Sunday.

Police Commissioner Hans Holmer told reporters that two bullets recovered at the scene of the late Friday night shooting, a downtown sidewalk, were fashioned from an unusual combination of metals and may have been handmade.

Police said this could make it harder to track down the source of the bullets.

Sweden's two-day-old caretaker government meanwhile held its first session and discussed arrangements for the funeral of Social Democratic leader Palme, set for March 15.

Foreign Minister spokesman Lars Loennback said the funeral would be closed to the public, but "many foreign guests" would be invited. Palme, 59, was serving his fourth term as prime minister and was regarded as a top Western European spokesman on disarmament and socialist causes.

Social Minister Gertrud Sigurdsen said there would be no official declaration of national mourning, for which Sweden has no precedent.

Wife threatens suicide over husband's release

GROTON (AP)—A 27-year-old woman armed with four loaded weapons threatened to kill herself Sunday unless her husband was given a leave from the U.S. Navy, forcing police to evacuate 12 families in the middle of the night before arresting her.

Paula Gosline called the U.S. Naval Submarine Base New London late Saturday night and said she would kill herself by 1 a.m. Sunday if her husband, Daniel, was not on his way home from a Naval base in Scotland, said Lt. James Falvey of the Groton Town Police. Falvey said Mrs. Gosline had a loaded .44-caliber Magnum, AR-15 rifle, .357-caliber Magnum and a handgun. Her 4½-year-old daughter was in the house.

Falvey said the Navy asked her husband to call her and while the couple spent two hours talking on the telephone, the Groton Town Special Operations Group surrounded the home, and evacuated 12 nearby families. Falvey said a police officer pulled up in front on the home in a Navy Shore Patrol van and was admitted to the house "on the pretense of being from the military."

Falvey said after Mrs. Gosline was told her husband was coming home, she was taken to the police station where she was charged with first degree reckless endangerment, risk of injury to a minor and disorderly conduct. Falvey said Mrs. Gosline is being held in Norwich State Hospital on $10,000 bond. Her daughter was taken to a relative's home.

Falvey said her court date is tentatively set for March 10 in New London Superior Court.

Lt. Cherie Beatty, commander of Submarine Group 2, confirmed Sunday that Daniel Gosline is on his way home from the Holy Loch submarine site in Scotland for an "emergency leave." She said she didn't know how long the leave would be, but "that will be determined when he gets here."

Daughter puts $400 contract on father

SELDEN, N.Y. (AP)—Classmates sometimes saw black-and-blue marks on Cheryl Pierson's body, but she told them they were nothing to worry about.

Now authorities say those bruises were the only indication that the 16-year-old cheerleader had suffered five years of incestuous abuse at the hands of her father.

The situation didn't come out into the open until her father, 42-year-old James Pierson, was shot dead in the family driveway. Miss Pierson and her boyfriend were arrested and accused of paying a 17-year-old schoolmate $400 to kill him. Miss Pierson and the schoolmate were charged with the death; the boyfriend with conspiracy.

"If a kid comes into school and is banged up, I would think it would come to somebody's attention," said John G. Ehrlich, chief of the family crime bureau of the Suffolk County district attorney's office.

But Miss Pierson had never been mentioned in any complaint to his office. Ehrlich's staff has increased from two to six in the past four years, while the number of child abuse complaints increased tenfold.

Work in recent years to uncover cases of child abuse "makes this all the more troubling. There is an avenue. They don't have to kill their father," said Arthur Dermer, principal at the school Miss Pierson attended, Newfield High School in Coram.

"There were a lot of ways she could have avoided the problems with her father," agreed Assistant District Attorney Edward Jablonski.

Miss Pierson's lawyer, Paul Gianelli, said she now realizes there were alternatives, and regrets her father's death.

At the arraignment, Gianelli wiped tears from Miss Pierson's face as she sat with her hands cuffed behind her.

Israeli mayor shot outside City Hall

NABLUS, Occupied West Bank (AP)—A moderate Palestinian recently appointed by Israel as mayor of Nablus, the West Bank's largest city, was fatally shot 30 yards from City Hall on Sunday as he walked to work, authorities said.

The Israeli said the assassin escaped into a crowded market.

The killing of Mayor Zafer al-Masri was condemned by both moderate Arabs and Israelis as a setback to Middle East peace efforts.

Two Syrian-backed Palestinian factions that reject a negotiated settlement with Israel claimed responsibility.

Al-Masri, 44, known for his pro-Jordanian views, was the only Arab so far to accept Israeli appointment as a mayor in the West Bank, which Israel captured from Jordan during the 1967 Arab-Israeli War.

He took over from an Israeli military officer as head of Nablus, a city of 100,000 people, on Dec. 19 with the tacit support of Jordan's King Hussein and of Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Al-Masri was shot at 8 a.m. as he approached the front door of City Hall. Authorities said he died a short time later in a hospital.

An Israeli army officer, who insisted on anonymity, said al-Masri was shot twice in the chest and once in the thigh with a 7.65 mm pistol. The army first said he was shot in the back.

The Israeli army imposed a curfew that was expected to stay in force until the funeral Monday. Black flags were hung from City Hall.

Soldiers set up roadblocks at entrances to Nablus and rounded up Arab youths for questioning. One group of 20 Arabs was seen being held at gunpoint before reporters were ordered from the area.

HARTFORD (AP)—A governor's task force plans to introduce a measure Monday it hopes will result in outlawing family violence and establishing policies on dealing with domestic assault and battery.

According to Gayle Brooks of the Connecticut Task Force on Abused Women, the measure would also require police to make an arrest in abuse cases on probable cause.

NEW YORK (AP)—Ozark Air Lines, a St. Louis-based air carrier that earned only $636,000 last year, has agreed to be acquired by Trans World Airlines for $250 million, the companies said.

The merger agreement signed Saturday comes against a backdrop of rapid consolidation and intense competition in the U.S. airline industry, and was the second big airline merger announced in a week.

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—President Corazon Aquino on Sunday abolished the government's power to detain people without charge, a practice her ousted predecessor used in an attempt to quell a growing communist insurgency.

She told more than 1 million cheering Filipinos at an outdoor rally that the practice was "not warranted" and had helped rather than hindered the guerrillas.

Corporation donates money for computerized classroom

In about a year-and-a-half, engineering students here may be using the latest computers in conjunction with videotapes to simulate sophisticated experiments before they do the real thing in a laboratory.

All this is made possible by a $150,000 gift from the Hamilton Standard Division of United Technologies Corporation and the expertise of UConn's engineering faculty.

Hamilton Standard is donating the money over a five year period to help the university establish a computer-aided instruction (CAI) classroom within the United Technologies Engineering Building now under construction adjacent to Engineering II.

Donald G. Richards, vice president-technology at Hamilton Standard, said his firm "has a continuing objective to maintain close ties with academia especially with The University of Connecticut School of Engineering, which has been a principal source for our recruitment of talented engineering graduates.

The school of engineering and Hamilton Standard have worked together in other areas such as cooperative internships, student projects, classroom lecture assistance, teaching fellowships, factory tours, student loans, faculty consultants, and on-site educational courses, he said. "This is yet another important step in assisting the university in providing a quality education for our future engineers."

Peter McFadden, a professor of mechanical engineering and former dean of the UConn engineering school, said computer-aided instruction will offer the potential to change how students are educated.

McFadden said Hamilton Standard already has made a $30,000 installment on its five-year committment. He said that by providing funds in this manner, the CAI laboratory can take advantage of new developments in the field as they occur during the next few years. This is beneficial in view of rapidly changing computer technology.

Michael G. Cutlip, professor and head of the chemical engineering department, envisions a laboratory with 20 to 30 computer-aided instruction work stations that will deliver instructional materials. A number of them, he said, will be hooked up with videotape or videodisks with laser disk capability.

Cutlip described some of the kinds of activities that would be possible in the new laboratory once it is operational and said that steps already have been taken to create interactive software for engineering problem solving.

Students in the new CAI lab might use the equipment to simulate an experiment to sharpen their understanding of the fundamentals. They could make mistakes and learn safety concepts before trying the experiment or process in a traditional lab setting. Using the computer-based instruction lab, the students can do things more efficiently, effectively, accurately and quickly, Cutlip said.

He said that the lab will make possible the simulation of the latest state-of-the-art equipment that might not be immediately available. The use of videotape or videodisks would provide a means of having students see a piece of engineering equipment being used in an industrial facility and to relate this experience to their classwork.

Widening of 195 down the road

By Leslie Finnegan
Daily Campus Staff

MANSFIELD—It may be 1996 before Route 195 and Hunting Lodge Road are widened. Or if an alternative is found, the proposed projects may never occur.

The state Department of Transportation's master transportation plan for the next 10 years includes the widening of Route 195 and the reconstruction of Hunting Lodge Road, both from North Eagleville Road to Route 44.

"There is a present problem with traffic on Route 195 and Hunting Lodge Road," Aline Booth, chairman of the Mansfield Planning and Zoning Commission said at last week's Town Council meeting. "The Conn Tech [research park] and field house [expansion] would make it worse."

Yet even though a problem already exists, the state doesn't plan to fund the changes until the period of 1989-1996.

One alternative to the proposed projects would be a road running north and south through the Conn Tech site, Booth said.

This plan would "protect established and future residential areas on Hunting Lodge Road and Route 195," she said.

The state estimates the cost of the 1.4 mile widening of Route 195 to be $800,000. The 1.2 mile reconstruction of Hunting Lodge Road is estimated at $1.2 million.

But the town council decided last Monday that it will ask for comments from residents before any project begins.

"We want an opportunity for town comment," Joan Buck, a council member, said.

With the state's funding so far off, any changes won't be made in the near future.

"These are really long range time lines," Mayor Jane Bobbit said.

Ceremonies close Black History Month

By Claudia Corvalan
Campus Correspondent

Closing ceremonies for Black History Month were held Friday at the Afro-American Cultural Center.

Artie Travis, coordinator of the center, evaluated the month. Many mini-lectures and talks were held, with attendance ranging from 10 to 50 percent white, he said. Video movie nights and the black history ball gave students a chance to relax, he said, and the highlight of the month was the speech from the Rev. Jesse Jackson.

Living in America—"Joy and Pain," was the theme for Black History Month, which Travis called a success.

"We are very thankful for the good support that UConn has given to the black minority population in providing a home for black students," he said.

"Things are changing, and things are getting better, but we have to provide a program like this, to show that we (blacks) are equal. We have to be able to communicate," Travis said. "We want to keep the same intensity and unity that we had this month, and we want to keep the black person fully aware."

...spring concert funds

"USG should support something students support," Jeffrey Muchnick, president of Buckley Council, said.

"I don't think we have enough money to cover all costs," Comptroller Lynn LaMonica said. "If students want it (the concert), they should show that they want it," LaMonica said. "If they could just help us out, that's all I'm asking."

"They should have fund raisers," she added.

LaMonica said that USG's unappropriated surplus is dwindling each year, and it is urgent that money is available for future years.

"What can area councils sacrifice?" LaMonica asked. She said area councils could forfeit the opening act of the concert.

Dawn Desrosiers, president of South Campus Council, said "You're trying to cut back pennies from the budget to take back what's already ours. I can't see you punishing us for spending our money."

"We're trying to budget for next year, too," Arthur Strassle, USG president, said. "We're coming down to so little money. If anything, it's going to come down to less funding next year."

Jennifer Reinks, vice president of USG, added, "We're going to be hurting future programs for next year."

Jeff Taylor, student affairs chairman, proposed to reduce the original budget by $1,040.

From the budget for the spring weekend concert, $1,000 was cut from the $1,100 for power and outhouses and $40 was cut from the $216.30 for the first aid station.

Area council presidents were satisfied with the decision. Andrew Tedford, president of Towers Council, said, "Area councils are very thankful to USG for their cooperation in helping to make spring weekend 1986 a success."

Tedford also said that he doesn't know how the councils are going to come up with the additional $1,040 that was cut from the budget.

In other business, USG filled five vacancies on the assembly. The new members are Jennifer Fitts, commuters; Gordon Landwirth, Alumni; Kathy Pae, Shippee; Steve Podeszwa, South; and Bill Wilcox, McMahon.

Student recalls life in Cuba

By Pamela Close
Campus Correspondent

Horror stories of government control, censorhip of public information, family separation, raids, beatings, and bribery have all touched our hearts in the past. Fortunately, for many of us they are just stories. It is sad and frightening to think that for some of our peers, however, these "stories" are a terrifying reality.

"My family decided to leave Cuba when the government started interfering in our everyday lives," says Luis Orama, a second semester engineering student here. Once his family officially petitioned the government for the authorization to leave, they were "marked" people by both the Cuban government and society.

Immediately, his parents were removed from their jobs. Then, "the government took inventory of everything we had," continues Luis. "All that we owned was theirs."

A concentration camp was the destination of his father, a prominent mechanical engineer. Complete with machine guns, electric fences, dogs and hard labor in sugar cane fields, the conditions were oppressive. For instance, workers were allowed only one day off every fifteen days. This day was the only time that they had any contact with their families.

"We had no idea where in Cuba my father was until he came home," says Luis.

One of the only ways to be able to leave Cuba is to pay the government a lot of money, according to Luis. Fortunately, his uncle here in the United States supplied his relatives with the financial assistance that they desperately needed. After two long years, Luis and his family finally received permission from the Cuban government to leave their country.

Unexpectedly, right before their departure, the government seized the family's suitcases, packages and extra money. Luis emphasizes that they were left with only the clothes on their backs and their passports. Finally, after waiting three days at the airport, they were allowed to board the plane. Even at this point, there was no guarentee that they would really be able to leave, Luis says.

"They own you until the plane takes off," Luis sadly admits.

When asked if he would ever return to Cuba, Luis says, "maybe when it gets better, but not now." He says he still has too many bad memories. For example, everything in Cuba is rationed, including food and basic medication. Luis also points out that you have to "pay off everyone" in order to leave the country. Finally, Luis described how a group of Communists unexpectedly raided the home of one of his cousin's friends when they found out he wanted to leave Cuba, and beat him.

Even though Cuba has censored many of its news reports, it still seems to many Americans like a terrible place to live. Luis says that although he disagrees with the actions and attitudes of the Cuban government, he is honestly proud of his heritage.

Luis Orama is lucky. He was able to escape with his family and can now consider his horror stories as a part of his past that was left behind in Cuba.

"They can't do anything to me now," smiles Luis proudly. "I am a citizen of the United States."

Foreign women unite in talent show tonight

By Jill Zuccardy
Daily Campus Staff

There will be singing and dancing, piano playing and guitar strumming, a costume exhibit and a poetry reading tonight in von der Mehden. It's a talent showcase with a unique twist—the performers are all women and they represent a variety of countries.

As part of the Women of the Arts program, "Women Around the World" is an attempt to bring together different groups of women on campus, according to Kathorin Roy, program coordinator and organizer of tonight's show.

"I thought it would be nice to have a program like this, to bring the international communities on campus together to display their talents," said Roy, who is a fine arts graduate student here.

Roy said that the original idea was to have the women perform something representative of their own culture. However, some of the international women chose to show their talents in performances representing cultures other than their own.

One women intends to display her costume exhibit, with costumes from a variety of countries, including India, Vietnam and Malasia. Another women will sing folk songs, and another will perform an African dance.

Roy said the evening promises an interesting glimpse into the talents of some of the university's international women students.

"It's something a little different, a little unusual," Roy said.

The show beings at 7:30. Admission is free.

Drug plan: Not as good as it looks

On the surface, baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth's decision on penalties for drug use looked good. Announced Friday, the penalties included conditional suspensions for 11 players unless they contribute a percentage of their salary to drug rehabilitation programs in their hometowns, provide 50-100 hours of community service and agree to mandatory drug testing for the rest of their careers.

Reaction to the announcement varied widely. Red Sox pitcher Bob Stanley said the penalties were "pretty harsh," but teammate Al Nipper said, "Maybe the punishment should have been a little more stern to make it a deterrant." Yankees owner George Steinbrenner called the decision "a brilliant and innovative solution," but Keith Hernandez, who is one of the conditionally suspended players, said, "Holy Mackeral, I don't understand it." Another player involved in the action, Oriole second baseman Alan Wiggins, said he had no complaints about the plan.

The reactions aren't surprising, considering the nature of the decision. At first the punishment looks stern, but with the escape clause, it's closer to a "Band-Aid on a hemorrhage" solution.

The primary problem with the decision is the lack of unified support for it. While Ueberroth was winding up his press conference Friday, the Players' Association was already planning a grievance filing party. It's amazing how the Association has grown so anti-owner, anti-commissioner that it can't even support corrective measures designed to protect the people it claims to represent.

When NBA Commissioner Larry O'Brien announced a similar drug plan a few years back, Player Association president Bob Lanier stood in the same room, saying that the association fully supported the plan. Since then there has been no legal challenge and at least one player has been banished (Michael Ray Richardson). The key to the success of the NBA plan is that it's a joint venture between the players and the owners.

Until the commissioner, owners and players come up with a plan they can all stand behind, any action any of the groups takes will fall far short of being a real solution.

The magazine, which replaced the earlier monthly publication of the Daily Campus, Scanner, will include stories on a bicentennial theme and several stories on comics.

In addition to dormitories, the Daily Campus Magazine will be available today in most academic buildings and the Student Union, where the Daily Campus is regularly found.

The Daily Campus Magazine will again publish in early April with an edition on the people of Connecticut. Several well known residents of the Connecticut area will be profiled in depth.

5 YEARS AGO TODAY

The Storrs Committee Against the Draft (SCAD) announced Monday night plans to organize a bus trip on March 22 to Washington D.C. for a national rally against the draft. The National Mobilization Against the Draft is planned to coincide with the official call to register according to SCAD member Carl Connetta. A poster and sign-up campaign are planned to make the bus available to those interested.

The committee will also begin a network for draft counseling after the spring break.

SCAD is also seeking funding from FSSO to sponsor a debate between prominent proponents supporting and opposing the draft.

Edward Ericson

The bully factor

Dr. Thomas Elemendorf counted violent acts on T.V. and found an average of seven an hour in 1976. He further added that "standard television cartoons for children under the age of 10" average one act of violence per minute. I laughed when I read that report. He was watching Tom and Jerry cartoons and counting pies thrown in the face of "violent acts."

I laughed some more the next year when a lawsuit was filed after a clown named Tickles threw a pie in a dean's face during a Jr. High's graduation ceremony in Fairfield. Tickles was charged with assault, and Mary Diorio, the woman who supposedly hired him, was charged with breach of peace. She is married to the town's most controversial lawyer, and as I got to know his these past two summers, I realized he had nothing to do with the Tickles caper, despite what newspapers and Tickles' testimony said. Tickles, a man with a long record of weasely underhandedness, went free. Mary's punishment was a $1000 fine, $200 of community service, and 30 days in the can. The case is being appealed.

But we'll save that strange and complicated saga of small-town Jr. G-Men fixing testimony, and inept judges accepting perjury as evidence, for some other column (or maybe the chapter of a book...or maybe the whole book).

I'm probably not too unusual in that I have two friends who've been shot. Duane, a year younger than me, has a scar from just under his right eye to just under his right ear. He and another kid (they were both about 16) were drunk and stoned at the kid's house, when the kid blew off half his face with a shotgun. The kid served no time for the incident.

Ike, who occasionally works as a mechanic at the gas station where I pump gas in the summer, was shot in the stomach with a .38 as he talked with a friend in the Beardsly Terrace housing project in Bridgeport. The guy who shot him was aiming for the other guy. He was never caught.

You know you live in a sick society with twisted priorities when a pie in the face rates a three month show trial, a shotgun blast in the face means nothing, and genocide is good for a pact making it illegal—which takes 37 years to ratify—but with a loophole big enough for the U.S. to drive a tank through...

Speaking of which, Ronald Reagan wants to increase defense spending again. Last Wednesday, he said, "Strength is the most persuasive argument we have to convince our adversaries...to stop bullying other nations." (The logical, unstated, rejoinder to that being "and the more strength we have, the better we might bully our adversaries."

"Our adversaries, the Soviets—we know from painful experience—respect only nations that negotiate from a position of strength," Reagan said.

It seems, when the president speaks this way, that the logic of force is the clearest and most pure. Yet when violence occurs in real life, its perpetrators are usually referred to as irrational, or even crazy. It's too bad, for instance, that neither Duane nor Ike had a gun of his own, or any time to negotiate with his attacker, or each may have avoided his "painful experience." Swedish Prime Minister Olaf Palme may have saved his own life is he had a weapon, but he was a peaceful man, and apparently he had no time to negotiate either...

Reagan's speech shared Peter Corjulo's nearly profound premise that a nation's international respect rests solely on its ability to terrorize its enemies. No moral judgement, no pipedreams of world peace, just the cold, hard steel of realpolitik and warheads.

Reagan praised the Philippine people for avoiding bloodshed in last week's revolution. I was reminded of the mob of Aquino supporters who surrounded army tanks and stalled them. Those people knew the tank operators wouldn't hurt them. The perceived ability to inflict pain and terror was gone, and the tanks didn't move. Then I remembered the tiny band of protestors who lay down in front of buses carrying bigshots to the recent Trident christening. They gave their names as "Martin Luther King" as they were roughly dragged away by police. These protestors are small-time, and easy to control, but even so, the cops are sure to bully them. I wonder what U.S. Army National Guardsmen would do if put in a situation similar to that of those Philippine tank soldiers.

Indeed, so far, all the Tridents have been launched. What can a pacifist hope to accomplish in this violent world?

Mahatma Gandhi was a great pacifist and is credited with liberating India from Britain. Unfortunately, India remains among the poorest nations in the world, and census experts say India will surpass China in total population by the year 2000. Also, many social scientists believe Gandhi actually slowed-down British "decolonization." They say he should have been more patient.

Martin Luther King, Jr. was peacefully instrumental in breaking the back of racism. Yet prejudice remains on a gross scale. People also told him he was hindering the process, that he should sit down and be patient.

One of John Lennon's main themes in his songs, and his life, was world peace, but I heard him say in an interview that he didn't consider himself a "serious peace activist." The interviewer asked him why he felt that way, and with no hesitation, Lennon answered, "Because if you look at the serious peace activists, they all got shot."

It was kind of funny when he said it.

NCTV provides Quickies

Campus Network, Inc.'s National College TeleVision (NCTV), the only TV network exclusively for the college community, is making strides in another area of entertainment—bringing aspiring comedians via their "Care*-free Comiquickies" show to college students nationwide. Care*free Sugarless gum, sponsors of the "Care*free Comiquickies" series, is strengthening their commitment, insuring exposure for fresh, new comedians on NCTV.

A variety of New York's hippest, brightest young comedians will reach over 1.4 million students each week during "Care*free Comiquickies" instant doses of comic relief. During the Spring '86 semester, bits from the routines of 11 comedians taped at Campus Network's New York City production facility will be aired, including:

Adrianne Tolsch, who has opened for the likes of Henny Youngman, The Pointer Sisters and Harry Anderson, was voted the Best Female Comic of '82 and was described by Newsweek Magazine as "one of the new queens of comedy"; Ron Darian, a two-time champion of "Star Search;" and Beverly Mickins, a semifinalist in the "New York Laugh-Off Contest."

"Care*free Comiquickies" runs ten times weekly on NCTV, each one about three minutes in length.

A "Care*free Comiquickies" Spring Break bash in Daytona, Florida (details TBA) is also in the works.

NC wins indoor title

By Joshua Hoffman
Daily Campus Staff

After two days of exhausting competition, a champion of the UConn women's soccer tournament was finally declared, and it was none other than the Huskies' staunchest opponent, North Carolina.

North Carolina defeated the Huskies by a score of 2-0 to win the six-on-six competition in front of a small but vocal crowd in the field house Sunday.

To qualify for championship rounds, the teams had to possess either of the top two records in their division. Both UConn teams entered in the tournament qualified.

The Husky "blue" team bowed out in the quarterfinals, losing on penalty kicks to a team sponsored by Budweiser, after playing to a scoreless tie in regulation.

The "white" team was also taken to penalty kicks in their quarter final round. However, this team was able to survive the kicks and defeat Nassau Community College. UConn goalie Laura Skaza stopped all but one of Nassau's shots, and Rita Haidous and Shelley McElroy scored to give the Huskies the victory.

In the semi-finals, UConn beat a club team called Soccer Plus. In that game, Linda Jackson gave the Huskies an early lead, but Soccer Plus tied it up late in the first half. However, midway through the second half, McElroy scored the winning goal on a blast from 20 feet.

...Huskies can't stop Beavers

past Bouchard to move UConn to within two at 14-2 with 3:52 left.

UConn pulled Marcoux and continued to swarm the Beaver zone, but time expired and the Husky season was over.

"They [UConn] really played tough down the stretch," Stirling said. "I thought the game was over at 3-0, and then at 4-1, but they came on strong in the end. It's a real tribute to their team."

Stirling also noted that Marcoux was a factor that helped UConn from rolling over earlier.

"Marcoux played superbly," Stirling said. "Anytime a goalie is called upon to make over 40 saves he's doing well. He made some real good point-blank saves and he basically kept the game close."

One player who Marshall pointed to as a major catalyst for UConn was Matt Carlin. Carlin, normally a defenseman, was moved to the center position on the third line. He responded by playing an effective, aggressive game.

"Carlin did a nice job," Marshall said. "We put him up there because that's [aggressiveness] what we were looking for. It charges up the third line when you get a hitter out there."

...Coles scores 1,000th point

From back page

Huskies were able to score again.

Syracuse led by as many as 26 points in the half and went into the locker room with a comfortable, 40-22, lead. The Orangemen obtained the insurmountable margin by shooting 48 percent from the field as UConn shot 25 percent. The Huskies connected on just 8-of-32 shots and committed nine turnovers.

With the game already decided after the first half, the only interest left for the dwindling crowd was when senior Tim Coles would score his 1,000th point. Coles entered the game needing just 11 points, but he kept the crowd waiting until 20 seconds into the second half when he reached the mark on a jump shot from the left baseline.

Coles and fellow senior Eddie Williams were honored before the game for their contributions to UConn. The ceremony was a nice honor for the two players, but it seemed a bit empty because of the absence of Kelley. However, the crowd made it known that it had not forgotten Kelley as the chant "We Want Earl" filled the building.

But even Kelley would have had a tough time putting a stop to Syracuse's carnage. Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim showed some mercy with 7:39 left in the game as he pulled Washington and center Rony Seikaly and inserted his pineriders.

Washington and UConn reserve Cliff Robinson tied for game scoring honors with 17 points. Coles added 15 for UConn as no other Huskies scored in double figures.

UConn ends the regular season at 12-15 overall and 3-13 in the Big East. Syracuse finishes at 23-4 and 14-2.

Although the second half was just an epilogue to the game-deciding opening half, it did provide some thrills for the UConn faithful that remained. Most notable was a slam dunk by seldom-used reserve Kenny Scott.

Scott, a transfer from Tulane University who has seen practically no action this season, was inserted by Perno with just under three minutes left. The 6-foot-9 sophomore proceeded to pick off a pass at midcourt and dribble wildly towards the basket. He dribbled the ball behind his back and when he reached the foul line, he went airborne. Looking more like Julius Erving [of the Philadelphia 76'ers] than a bench-warmer, Scott rose well above the hoop and shook the backboard with a one-handed slam.

Scott's move brought the crowd and the UConn bench to its feet and for the first time during the game, a slight smile broke across Perno's face. It was one of the few opportunities Perno has had to smile lately.

"The kids demonstrated they want to play," Perno said. "They are winners. When we lost Earl, it really took our chemistry away and we never got it back. But these kids have played with pride."

UConn now must prepare for the Big East tournament to be held this Wednesday through Saturday at New York's Madison Square Garden. The Huskies, seeded eighth in the tournament, will faced ninth-seeded Seton Hall Wednesday in the opening round. The winner of that game will face No. 1 seeded St. John's on Thursday.

...Outmanned Huskies give all, come up short final buzzer.

"The team played with a lot of heart," assistant coach Bruce Marshall said. "All things considered, the guys played a good, disciplined game."

Head coach Ben Kirtland also said his team skated hard, but the Huskies just didn't get the breaks they needed.

"We played well; everyone gave 100 percent," Kirtland said. "It was a real tough game, and we didn't get some needed breaks."

The ultimate break, which set Babson up with a lead it would never relinquish, came in the closing seconds of the first period. As Husky defensemen Charles Jancaterino exited the penalty box, the Beavers swarmed around the Husky net. Chuck Brooks sent a blast from the point that bounced off of Marcoux's pads, and Steve Villa picked up the loose puck and shovelled it in for a 1-0 Babson lead with only :08 showing on the clock.

Villa tallied again as he backhanded the puck past Marcoux only 26 seconds into the second period. The opposing coaches agreed, those two scores were the key in the game.

"We were badly outshooting them and we had some excellent chances," Babson coach Steve Stirling said, "but if the period ended in a 0-0 draw, it would have been a completely different game. I think that first goal might have killed them, and once we had a two-goal lead, we knew we would be really tough to beat."

Kirtland also felt the last-second goal changed the game. "If you could eliminate only the last 10 seconds of the first period and the first 30 of the second period, it would have been a different game," Kirtland said.

Play became more physical in the second period, Marcoux was even sharper. Though UConn opened up and skated end-to-end with the Beavers, Babson still outshot the Huskies, 16-9, in the period.

"Our area of concern coming into the game was the offensive zone and establishing ourselves as a force there," Kirtland said. "We didn't get the amount of pressure we needed."

"On the other end, however, we played excellently," Kirtland said. "J.T. did a good job and the whole defense played well. With all of our personnel changes, we had to start out by playing good defense."

With just under eight minutes elapsed in the final period, UConn suffered a defensive breakdown. Kevin Concannon sent a pass from the corner to Pete Epperson, who lifted the puck high past Marcoux. The Beavers had a 3-0 lead and the game seemed well in hand.

But just over a minute later, a fluke goal put the Huskies back into the game.

UConn's Dave Shepard was called for a penalty, but Babson maintained possession and Beaver goalie Dan Bouchard skated to the bench in favor of an extra attacker. With the puck at his own blueline, Babson's Tom Sasso was spun around by a Husky defender and his pass went astray.

The puck glided peacefully on its way into the unguarded Babson net. Shepard was credited with the goal and received a penalty on the same play.

But hope was extinguished again for UConn just over seven minutes later as Babson connected for a power-play 206. With Matt Carlin in the box for hooking, Steve Villa set up Jim Gavin alone in front of the Husky net. Gavin beat Marcoux and gave Babson a, 4-1, lead.

The Huskies responded with more offensive pressure, and shortly after a UConn time-out, Todd Krygier pounced on an uncovered puck in the Babson crease. He poked a rebound of a blocked shot

Orangemen squeeze UConn

Syracuse runs away with 75-58 win in Hartford

HARTFORD—The men's basketball team has played for many things this season—a winning record, a possible post-season tournament bid, a respectable finish in the competitive Big East. These were achievements which seemed amazingly possible as the season progressed.

However, the past three weeks have not been kind to UConn as the Huskies have lost seven straight games. It has come to the point where the previously mentioned goals now seem like cruel jokes in a bad movie.

And that movie came to a bitter and disheartening end Saturday at the Hartford Civic Center as a crowd of 16,014—the largest in New England college basketball history—saw No. 6-ranked Syracuse demolish outmanned Huskies, 75-58.

The final score is not indicative of how hard the Huskies played against the ultra-talented Orangemen. UConn had to fight for every point it scored, and according to coach Dom Perno, the Huskies proved they are a proud group.

"I don't think any of us could go out there night after night knowing the odds are always against you," Perno said, referring to the six games UConn has played without Earl Kelley. "You can't see what's out there and you can't see what's important. The kids are important, and they have withstood a lot of pressure."

Things were not easy for UConn against Syracuse. The Huskies entered the game as 11-point underdogs, and when Dwayne "the Pearl" Washington opened the scoring five seconds into the game on an easy layup, it was obvious UConn was in for a long night.

Gerry Besselink tied the score at two on a 10-foot jump shot 25 seconds later. But Phil Gamble's free throw with 12:08 left in the first half was the only point scored by UConn over a 10-minute span. During that time period, Syracuse ran the score to 26-3 before the

Babson ends hockey's season

WELLESLEY, MASS.—The injury-riddled hockey team ended its season at the Babson Recreation Center Saturday night in the first round of the ECAC playoffs.

The No. 6 Huskies, with a makeshift lineup, were iced by the No. 3 Beavers 4-2, in a heroic last-ditch effort, closing out what proved to be a very successful 1985-86 season.

UConn was forced to play without three of its top five scorers and was unable to muster much of an offensive threat.

Harry Geary, who led the team with a record-setting 58 points; co-captain Mark Kosinski, whose 46 points this season moved him into second place on the all-time Husky scoring sheet; and freshman Mark Leonard, whose 35 points made him the second-highest scoring frosh ever, all went down with knee injuries in the two-week time span prior to the playoffs.

The result was a continual Beaver barrage on UConn goaltender J.T. Marcoux and an impotent Husky offense. Babson outshot UConn, 53-26.

However, UConn was able to maintain a high intensity level and was in the game down to the

Women's hoop loses

CHESTNUT HILL, MASS.—Big East Player-of-the-Year Shelly Pennefather scored 25 points to lead Villanova to a 68-47 victory over the women's basketball team Friday in the first round of the Big East Women's Basketball Tournament hosted by Boston College.

Pennefather keyed a first-half Villanova surge which vaulted the Wildcats to a 20-2 lead early in the half and a 40-16 lead at half time. UConn was plagued by poor field goal shooting as the Huskies hit only five of 20 attempts in the first 20 minutes.

Junior Tammi Sweet led UConn with 14 points while senior Audrey Epstein closed out her career with a 12-point performance. UConn senior Peggy Walsh scored only seven points in her finale, but was the game's leading rebounder with 11. Walsh's seven points moved her into the No. 2 position on UConn's career scoring list. She closed out her career with 1413 points and finishes as the Huskies' all-time leading rebounder, pulling down 937.

Another first for track

CHESTNUT HILL, Mass.—The women's track team used three first-place and four second-place finishes in the final day of competition to capture the 1986 New England Indoor Championship title, its third New England indoor crown in the last four years.

In the two-day competition held at Boston College, UConn scored 122 points to outdistance runner-up Boston University (104) and 24 other New England track squads for first place honors.

Top UConn performances were turned in by senior captain Frederica Jones and junior Mary Kennen along with the Husky 3200 meter relay team. Jones won the long jump championship with a lead of 19'1¾, then placed second in the 400-meter dash, posting a time of 56.8 to finish one-tenth of a second behind winner Murtonda Durant of UMass-Boston with a 56.7.

Kennen successfully defended her high jumptitle with a leap of 5'9", tying the UConn record in the process after placing second in the pentathlon in Saturday's competition.

The UConn 3200 meter relay quartet of Kim Hawkes, Denise Barrett, Tina Goettel and Caroline Mitchell took top honors in the event, posting a winning time of 9:20.20.

Redfield wins twice

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.—UConn freshman Floyd Redfield and the Huskies' mile relay team captured first-place finishes Saturday at the New England Championships, hosted by Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Redfield earned the championship with a time of 48.17 seconds. Redfield then anchored the first-place mile relay team which clocked a 3:15.90. Fellow freshman Bill Oliverson led off the relay followed by Mike Christie and Larry Byar.

Christie also earned valuable points in the 600-yard dash and the triple jump. Other UConn performers to score points were Tim Corbett in the 55-meter hurdles, Mike England in the 1000-yard run, and the distance medley relay team.

The individual performances helped the Huskies to a fifth-place finish overall in the 42-team field. Northeastern won the team title followed by Boston University, Boston College, UMass and UConn.

McCurry leads gymnasts

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Judy McCurry captured the all-around title en route to leading UConn to a 172.75 victory over Trenton State (159.10) and host Pennsylvania (158.65) Saturday.

McCurry finished second in the uneven bars with a score of 8.8, won the balance beam event with an 8.9 and finished third in the floor exercise (8.8) to give her the 35.15 total in the all-around.

Freshman Lynn Heffernan was another key performer for UConn as she established a school record in the vault, posting a 9.1 for first place.

The win pushes UConn's season record to 8-5. The Huskies return to action on Wednesday when the host Rhode Island at 7:30 p.m.
